(image credit: Square Enix) Square Enix has just unveiled two new Kingdom Hearts games in one fell swoop, Kingdom Hearts: Melody Of Memory and Kingdom Hearts Dark Road. Both games are scheduled to launch in 2020. The first rhythm game that comes to Xbox One, PS4 and Nintendo Switch, while later by turns the mobile game is coming to Android, iOS and Amazon. Hearts: Memory Melody and Dark Road Unfortunately, there is no English trailer just yet, but I'm sure someone on the Internet has translated it now. While Kingdom Hearts: Melody Of Memory and Kingdom Hearts Dark Road seem like spin-offs, I wouldn't be surprised if they have important story moments in the story of the all-encompassing series. I'm not going to pretend to understand the intricate story structure that is Kingdom Hearts. However, from what I have collected, the Kingdom of The Heart. The melody of memory will have you immerse yourself in the memories of Kairi, hence the name to help her remember everything she has forgotten. Kingdom Hearts Dark Road received an official release date of June 22 in the trailer. It seems that you will be able to access this game from the Kingdom Hearts Union Cross launch screen as if it were an extension. We'll probably learn more about these Kingdom Hearts games when official English trailers launch for them in the near future, so stay tuned. Today's Best Kingdom Hearts 3 Deals Season 4 Last Kingdom shows a different side for many characters, but one important one comes to mind in Lady Aelswith (Eliza Butterworth). She is a very pious and intelligent woman who wants only the best for England and her husband's dreams. Now she understands that she needs to change and conform to make those goals realized. Read on to find out why Aelswith has a change of heart in the new season. There are spoilers ahead for season 4. Lady Aelswith is not needed, as she once was Eliza Butterworth David M. Bennett /Getty Images for Dunhill In the time of King Alfred (David Dawson), his wife held a special place in court. Her word was almost as important as her husband's, and she wielded great influence with everyone. Now that Alfred is gone, the son of Aelsvit, King Edward (Timothy Innes) is the head of Wessex. She believes her son doesn't need her as much as she had hoped. Instead, he relies on the advice of others, including the father of his wife, Ethelhelm (Adrian Schiller). Why Lady Aelswith has a change in the heart of Aelswith quickly realizes that her efforts to make Wessex great did not appreciate her son. She moves to the worst rooms and is treated with less respect than ever before. She begins to regret her past choices and how she chose to treat some people, including Becca's father (Ian Hart), though she is unable to stop him from walking away with Uhtred (Alexander Dreymon). She helps stop the Danes by challenging their son and king When the homeland of Aelsvit Mercia is attacked by the Danes, she encourages his son to come to their aid. Her own lady daughter Lady Lady and she decides to leave and rally the men to fight. Aelswith keeps it a secret and doesn't tell his son until he confronts her about it. When her good advice is not accepted by her son, she challenges him by sending her father Pylrig (Cavan Clerkin) to Welsh to get them to join the fight. With the Welsh support of the Mercians, they win the fight when Edward decides to join the battle as soon as it has already begun. In the end, he seems to have accepted his mother's advice and helped his sister and compatriots. Aelswith even reunites Edward's first wife with son Ethelstan Aelswith redeeming himself everywhere in season 4. She arranges a meeting of Edward's first wife with her son, Ethelstan, whom she has not seen for many years. Aelswith tells her that they can never see each other again, but she will keep a close eye on the baby. She knows that the reason they are separated is because of her doing when she called Edward to marry another noblewoman, not that she came to truly regret. Lady Aelswith has had a change of heart and she realizes that she can no longer act the way she is used to. She has to conform to this new way of life to survive, but she will also try to do the right thing along the way. Each year, more than 1.5 million people in the United States suffer from a heart attack or stroke.1 Although deaths from heart disease have been steadily declining over the past 40 years, the trend appears to have stalled. Mortality in some populations, including adults ages 35 to 64, is on the rise.2 This alarming trend points to the need to focus and act to improve the cardiovascular health of all Americans, helping people avoid unhealthy behaviors that put them at risk of heart attack and stroke and improving care for those with key risk factors. About a million Hearts® 2022 Million Hearts® 2022 is a national initiative co-led by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) an external icon to prevent 1 million heart attacks and strokes over 5 years. The focus is on a small set of priorities chosen for their ability to reduce heart disease, stroke and related conditions. The CDC's Division for the Prevention of Heart disease and stroke provides guidance and support for the Million @ Initiative, which began in 2012. The Agency actively cooperates with CMS, prioritizes and manages communications, partnerships, research, translations and evaluation work on this initiative. Million Hearts® 2022 is committed to a strong and specific commitment to these priorities and goals so that together we can improve cardiovascular health for all. Read the in-depth reports on the Million Hearts initiative® and progresses and milestones. This supplement was published in June 2020 as an update to the final report of Million Hearts®: Significant Progress 2012-2016. Read the supplement to learn more about the cardiovascular events that were prevented during the first Million @ Hearts. View the addendum pdf PDF - 422 KB Million Hearts® aligned efforts across the country to prevent cardiovascular disease using a selected set of evidence-based public health and clinical strategies. While final figures will not be available until 2019, we estimate that up to half a million cardiovascular events may have been averted from 2012 to 2016. During an interview with Dengeki Online, Kingdom Hearts 3 director Tetsuya Nomura confirmed that development is underway for Kingdom Hearts 3 DLC. Nomura has revealed that post-launch content will include a critical mode - an increased difficulty mode for hardcore fans - and story extensions that aim to fill some story holes that may have some players a little confused. Image credit: Square Enix When can we expect the Kingdom of The Heart 3 DLC? According to Nomura, the goal is to get all downloadable content by the end of 2019 before releasing Final Mix, which will cover both the game and all DLC. While the priority is to introduce free updates, premium DLC will be introduced later. I think the free DLC will be released in the form of additional updates from what I can do, but Pay DLC plans to put out several items at once in the form of a batch, Nomura told Dengeki Online. As a result, I'm glad I'll take some time to produce a paid DLC, but as soon as possible within a year as soon as possible, I would like the team to do the next job. Let's hope this premium DLC means more Disney-inspired worlds to explore... Kingdom Hearts 3 is currently available on PlayStation 4 and Xbox One. The host of the DIY series Embellish Network This!, Dena has parlayed her talent for transforming everyday objects into a range of stationery, fabrics and decorative accessories sold in stores across the country. Many of its designs begin with flowers and botanical patterns, which she draws herself. There's something about colorful flowering on a pillow or drapery that immediately lifts the spirits, she says. Dena's designs are often inspired by the lush gardens that surround her Lafayette, California, home where she lives with husband/business manager, Danny, and three children. For the past 13 years, they have worked on a 75-year-old house, turning 5 1/2 acres of grounds into a showcase of open rooms. The Indoors Out Dena Fishbein cast adorns furniture and fabrics with stylized floral patterns indoors and with a view. Here are her tips for converting the yard into charming vignettes: Use antique items such as iron gates or railings found in a flea market to create outdoor architecture. Fill a bird bath with ivy or perennials for unusual planter and marker paths. Group objects together to make a focal point. The collection of them is mounted in the direction of the barn. For a party or dinner, pull the carpet onto the lawn and dump it with pillows for comfortable places where guests can chat for hours. Don't forget the garden after dark. Many lanterns, candles and torches can fill the garden with a game of shade and light. Fishbein is really serious about the design of its gardens about five years ago when planning a wedding. Working with landscape designer Laurie Callaway, a family friend, they created a master plan for their property with different separate gardens they could complete in stages. Framed by antique fencing, stone walls, gazebos and shrubs, individual spaces are dedicated to perennials, vegetables, herbs and more than 100 rose plants. Since Dena is a scavenger of flea markets, ancient architectural elements define open spaces as receptacles. Filigree wrought-iron fencing is attached to the vegetable garden, for example, while antique gazebos and gazebos are focal points for climbing roses. Recently, an old chandelier was hung on a branch of an old tulip magnolia. Underneath it sits an antique table and chairs on a gold gravel bed, the perfect place for an outdoor dinner. It's wonderful to create open spaces that family and friends can discover as they squirm through the yard, says Dena. The gardens are indeed extensions of our indoor rooms.
